

ABANDON HOPE FOR LIVES OF ALL REMAINING VICTIMS CAUGHT IN TEXAS SCHOOL; MARTIAL LAW IS DECLARED

Estimate of Dead at New London Consolidated School Placed at 500; Call Military Court, Also Meeting of Technical Men of Oil Companies; 200 Children, Some Horribly Maimed, Scattered in Hospitals, Schools, Homes.

NEW LONDON, Texas, Mar. 19—Hope was abandoned today for the lives of all remaining victims caught in the shattered debris of the $1,000,000 consolidated school, where an estimated 500 children and teachers perished in a terrific gas explosion. Mayor John Timberlake, of nearby Overton, who made a preliminary investigation of the nation's greatest school disaster, said there was not a chance that any remained alive in the shambles. At the time of the blast the school held about 700 pupils and instructors.

Estimates of National Guard and other authorities place the dead at 500 today in the explosion which demolished the New London, Texas, consolidated school building while it was filled with pupils and teachers.

Two hundred children, some horribly maimed, were scattered around in homes, hospitals and churches in Overton, Tyler, Henderson, New London and other small towns over a radius of 100 miles from New London.

Reports placed the dead in the Overton Morgue at 275, 100 at Tyler and about 100 at Henderson.

On orders of Governor James V. Allred, declaring martial law in the New London area, Major Gaston Howard, in command of the troops, summoned the military court of inquiry to investigate the disaster.

At Washington, army and Red Cross officials speedily set up machinery to bring aid to the stricken community of three thousand persons. Senator Tom Connally, Democrat of Texas, demanded an inquiry by the United States Bureau of Mines, and State agencies of Texas, to ferret out the causes of the explosion.

At Overton, Texas, Colonel C. E. Parker of the National Guard, called a meeting of technical men of oil companies to "investigate as best we can."

NEW LONDON, Tex., Mar. 19—(INS)—

Five hundred children perished in the earth-rocking gas explosion which demolished the modern $1,000,000 consolidated school house here, frenzied rescue workers estimated today as they dug in the ruins for the bodies of scores still missing.

Another 200 or more child victims, some maimed for life, suffered severe injuries in the blast that brought devastation to most of the 1,200 families in this little boom town in the heart of the rich east Texas oil fields.

Principal Troy Buran insisted that there were about 700 children and 35 or more teachers in the two-story brick structure when the blast blew off the roof and tore out the walls at 3:20 p. m. yesterday, just ten minutes before dismissal time. Buran's estimate of 600 killed were believed by authorities to be somewhat high.

Dismiss Objections to Wally's Divorce

London, Mar. 19—(INS)—The Royal road to romance for Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson and the Duke of Windsor was cleared of all obstacles today when the London divorce court threw out an application to block the Baltimore beauty's divorce on grounds of collusion.

Sir Boyd Merriam, president of the divorce court, announced his decision after Francis Stevenson, a Londoner who filed an intervention in the case last December, made known his willingness to drop the proceedings.

The action means that Mrs. Simpson and the former King Edward VIII of England may marry at any date after April 27, when the divorce decree nisi she obtained last October at Ipswich Assizes becomes final and absolute.

Today's hearing in the ancient law courts where the Strand runs into Fleet Street, London's newspaper row, was held on a technicality.

Stevenson, an elderly, be-speckled man of medium height with a fresh complexion and thin gray hair, had informed the King's Proctor months ago he had dropped the action following Edward's abdication.

He said he had fled it merely as a result of rumor and press report and that he had no desire to continue with his single-handed effort to block one of history's great romances.

Explains to Rotarians Need for Hi-Y Clubs

Bristol Rotarians were addressed at their regular weekly meeting at the Elks' Home yesterday by one of the leaders of the Hi-Y boys movement, M. Darter. Mr. Darter explained the need for such boys' organizations throughout the country. He also outlined the development and activities of the Hi-Y movement in this section. The need for such organized clubs is essential to combat Fascism and Communism and other "isms," according to Darter.

J. Burriss, a teacher at Bristol High School, was a guest at the meeting. Mr. Burriss is faculty adviser of the Hi-Y club in Bristol high. Eugene Finney, student president of the high school Hi-Y club, was also in attendance.

An important meeting of the Rotary Club was announced for the regular session next week when a member of the Social Security Board will address the members on the compulsory health insurance as it is found in the social security code.

Montgomery County Out After Big Appropriation For Abington Hospital

BILL ASKS FOR $242,000

By Tony H. Smith
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

HARRISBURG, Mar. 19—(INS)—There seems to be some difference of opinion between the Republican and Democratic members of the House concerning appropriation measures for the Montgomery district . . . early in the session Rep. Hiram Ganser, Democrat, introduced an appropriation bill requesting the General Assembly to allot the sum of $40,000 to Abington State Hospital, one of the newest and largest in the Commonwealth . . . and this week the appropriation committee has been asked to consider a proposal which would give the same institution a sum of $242,000 . . . the latter was placed in the lower chamber's bill hopper by Rep. Edwin Winner, Republican from Montgomery . . . Representative Ganser, it was believed, based his recommendation on the amount Abington got last year—$34,000.

Safely through the triple reading gauntlet of the Senate and up for initial reading in the House this week was the Mundy "ripper" bill to remove county assessors in third class counties.

Bills galore poured into the Legislature hoppers of the House and Senate this week as the "deadline" on proposals drew near . . . all measures, except those providing appropriations and revenues must be in not later than March 18 . . . the deadline was expected to be extended to March 22.

The latest Robin Hood measure—one to provide special hunting areas for those nimrods who wish to stalk Pennsylvania's elusive wild life with bow and arrow—received a substantial boost this week . . . its sponsor, Rep. Edwin Winner, Montgomery Republican, received a communication from Nicholas Biddle, chairman of the Board of Game Commissioners, in which the game official wholeheartedly endorsed the measure . . . incidentally, legislative sentiment seems to be favoring Winner's "special areas" archery measure in preference to his former proposal which would create a special season for the archers.

Montgomery county House members Monday night turned to the highway situation in the county and introduced some measures to improve the conditions in spots . . . Representative Winner, Republican, led the parade by presenting a measure that would establish an additional highway route in the county beginning at a point on the Philadelphia City-Cheltenham Township line at the intersection of Front street and Cheltenham avenue and thence in a general northeasterly direction.

No Need of a Steering Wheel?

(By "The Stroller")

We've heard of one-arm drivers coming to grief when their mind wandered from directing the car. And we've heard of intoxicated drivers coming to grief because they could not concentrate on their driving. But until yesterday we never heard of a driver who had so much faith in the ability of his car to pick out the road as to forget the steering wheel altogether and begin to read!

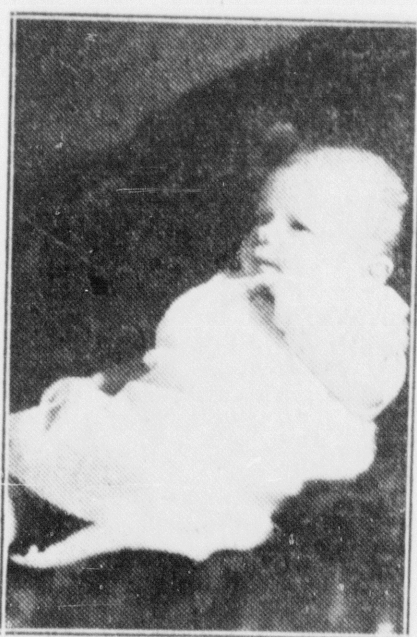

This was the case yesterday in Bristol when a certain man began to read, only to come to grief when he was startled from his reverie by a crash, and a realization that something out of the ordinary had happened. Yes, he ran into a very peaceable car parked along the edge of the street. Damage to both cars was slight, but we wonder if Indiana cars, or even New York cars, hold any records for guiding themselves down the streets of towns!

CLARENCE SCHWEIZER, JR. Bristol

Our most precious possessions usually come in small packages and Clarence is no exception to this rule. He has blue eyes and just a little dark curly hair, but then, what's a few hairs when the race for the Community's Favorite is at stake? Those things don't bother this little fellow, but he would like to have that Silver Loving Cup, and who wouldn't? From all reports Clarence is putting forth his best efforts this week, and is determined to come in for his share of honors, too. Clarence is the three-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Schweizer, of 627 Spruce street, Bristol, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Schweizer, of 2108 Wilson avenue, and Mr. and Mrs. C. Dugan, of 649 Spruce street, the grandparents, and Mrs. C. Schweizer, Mrs. Dugan and Mrs. C. Wright, the great-grandparents, all from Bristol, are taking an active part in Clarence's campaign.

OPPOSE PLAN TO CHARGE TOLLS ON FREE BRIDGES

Vigorous Protest Is Made by Keystone Automobile Club

BIG TAX ON MOTORISTS

A proposal to charge tolls on the 16 "free" bridges connecting Pennsylvania and New Jersey and spanning the Delaware river, has aroused vigorous opposition from the Keystone Automobile Club.

The proposal, made in a bill introduced in the Legislature at Harrisburg, Monday night, contemplates the issuance of $8,000,000 in bonds to reimburse the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey for the money spent in acquiring, improving and maintaining the bridges. The bonds are to be retired through payment of tolls, which are then to be continued to defray the cost of bridge upkeep and operation.

Characterizing the move as "a long step backward," J. Borton Weeks, president of the club, declared the measure should be speedily rejected by the Legislature.

"It is," he said, "another financial blow aimed at the motorist, who already is the most heavily taxed class of citizen in either State."

The freeing of toll bridges between Pennsylvania and New Jersey, from Trenton northward, has been in progress since 1908. In that year New Jersey made overtures to Pennsylvania and a commission was appointed to undertake the work.

Following is a list of the bridges and the traffic carried in 1935:

Lower Trenton-Morrisville, 4,614,097; Trenton-Morrisville (Calhoun street), 2,581,898; Yardley-Wilburth, 709,555; Washington Crossing, 317,593; Lambertville-New Hope, 1,308,154; Lambertville-Raven Rock, 39,350; Point Pleasant-Byram, 85,423; Frenchtown-Uhlerstown, 313,342; Milford-Upper Black Eddy, 363,266; Ittigsville, 375,946; Easton-Phillipsburg, 7,286,820; Belvidere-Riverton, 282,168; Delaware-Upper Mount Bethel, 1,031,944; Portland-Columbia, 399,729; Milford-Montague Township, 264,752; Stockton-Centre Bridge, 136,454.

Cartoons Illustrate An Address for Young People

Illustrating his talk "The Wages of Sin is Death" by means of cartoons, the Rev. V. E. Jacobson, Trenton, N. J., presented in splendid manner a worth-while address last evening, at a special program for young people in the Presbyterian Church of Our Saviour.

The Rev. Jacobson, pastor of the Non-Sectarian Church of Trenton, N. J., was accompanied to Bristol by a number of young men and young women from his church, this group also taking part in the evening numbers.

The hostess group was the Senior Christian Endeavor of the Presbyterian Church of Our Saviour. Approximately 200 were in attendance.

The Rev. Andrew George Solla, pastor of the local church, opened the meeting with a prayer, following the first hymn. He then introduced the evening speaker.

The Rev. Jacobson, a cartoonist of note, drew pictures illustrating his address. He showed the two roads of life, the easy and the hard, between which each individual must make a choice. Various steps along the easy road were taken up, with the easy road showing the way to shiftlessness, and a wasted life; the hard and right road bringing peace, comfort and satisfaction of doing the right thing.

The young people from the Non-Sectarian Church of Trenton pleased with vocal and instrumental selections; and also gave testimonies. The instruments, about 10 or 15 various kinds, included wind instruments, guitars, accordions, etc.

RELIEF FOREVER

Mr. Hopkins apparently is sticking to his thesis that we are faced with a permanent army of the unemployed. At least, he is credited with discussing with members of Congress establishment of the WPA work on a permanent basis and with a proposed expenditure of say 2½ billions a year.

Mr. Roosevelt, on the contrary, has assured us on several occasions, that "the crisis" is over. He has, as a matter of fact, gone so far as to issue orders to reduce relief expenditures under WPA. Each time, however, the orders are rescinded—under that pressure which generous federal assistance has brought into being. But he still is of the impression—so far as any one knows—that federal relief expenditures should be brought down to somewhere in the neighborhood of a billion a year.

So there seems to be a conflict of opinion between the President and his works progress administrator. And out of that conflict of opinion a conflict of purposes may arise. But we do not think the conflict will be either serious or lasting. We are betting that Mr. Hopkins will be the eventual winner. He has the backing of the mayors of the country's big cities and of the governors of the country's leading states, to say nothing of the members of Congress who find it politically more profitable to acquiesce in federal relief than to combat it.

JOHNS HOPKINS CLEANS UP

For years it has been urged, with the sense of futility that goes with counsels of perfection, that the only way to insure amateurism in college sport is to abolish the admission fee. But school athletics are big business and most athletic boards are under heavy commitments. The logic of circumstances has been against such a departure.

But Johns Hopkins has made the break, and made it cleanly, cutting through the woolly and disingenuous talk which most schools attempt to justify a dash of professionalism in their teams. Johns Hopkins abolishes the gate. It will finance its sports program, open its games to the public and it will neither pay nor give guarantees to the schools with which it competes.

The emphasis on sports at Hopkins was never marked, and its eleven last fall took only one game, so the transition to the new order offers no difficulty. An interesting point is that the school expects no diminution of school interest in sports, but on the contrary expects to attract larger squads of boys who have an enthusiasm for games but no disposition to compete with pros for places on teams. Playing the game for its own sake would change the atmosphere of many a stadium. The Hopkins experiment will be one to watch. It takes the only way that truly and directly strikes at the heart of professionalism and its various disguises.

And yet we wonder where Johns Hopkins will find opponents.

"Leisure to Repent"

by Ursula Parrott

CHAPTER XXI

Denise got up with her knees shaking and started to dress, to go sightseeing with Gilbert.

So those two had not meant to be furtive, to deceive Eustace; and she could still admire them—though, it was clear, her admiration meant very little to them. Curiously she could begin to estimate well enough the motives that had led them to embark on that week-end. It would have been spring, or that almost-spring of April in New York, when one's heart grows impatient.

They would have grown bored with a winter spent in their usual occupations. Felicia would have had tiresome visits with her Philadelphia people. Keith would have had one of his moods of exasperation with his father. They would have come to rely on each other, as people who could laugh together at all the stodgy respectable dull people they knew, whose lives went on and on monotonously—as, the years before, Keith had sometimes laughed with her, in that spring when they felt carefree and young together, that spring that seemed so long ago.

One of them would have suggested a week-end "to settle things." The other would have jumped at the idea, and helped with arranging details.

She thought: "Nothing will be settled for either of them ever really. They're that sort. It makes them much more glamorous than people like me, who do the predictable. The only wonder, I suppose, is that something like this has not happened to them, long before."

She made herself finish dressing with attention, as though the effect she might produce was important. A black silk frock with wide ruffles of white at throat and wrist, her silver fox cape, for the day was cool—a small black straw hat from Paris. She remembered, as she picked up the cape, the one Felicia had that was like it, and wished she'd chosen some other costume. Why she wished that, she couldn't tell, except that remembered phrases of that letter began to hurt her, acutely. They seemed so patronizing, as if she were a child who must be consoled for her non-comprehension of the behavior of adults.

Gilbert knocked at the door.

"Ready, Denise. The car's waiting."

"All ready." She hesitated, looking at his tall, wide-shouldered, lean figure, his dark eyes that were so troubled when they rested on her, and he didn't think she was noticing.

She did not love him. There were moments, as now, when she wondered why she did not, when she admitted to herself that he was stronger, surer, steadier than Keith, to whom she'd given her heart. But—her heart was given; and it seemed, permanently. She could see Keith with detachment sometimes now; she could judge him even ruthlessly; but she could not "get over" him, as people were supposed to get over things.

Gilbert said: "A ruble for your thoughts, Denise."

"All mixed up. I couldn't sort them out." Then she answered that vaguely troubled look on his face deliberately, because though she did not love him, and might never love him, she would never any more cause him unnecessary anxiety by any small concealment.

"I had a letter from Felicia, Gilbert. She said it was confidential, but naturally she didn't mean concerning you. Won't you read it?"

She took the scattered sheets from her bureau and handed them to him. He gave her a rapid glance, surprised, pleased perhaps. She could not be sure.

He stood by the window reading. When he was finished he said,

"Thanks for letting me see it," and nothing else.

In the car on the way to the Museum of Modern French Painting, he said: "I cabled your mother and father to bring Felicia to England as soon as they felt she was able. Would you like to take a house in Scotland or Brittany for the summer, with them?"

"Is that what you want, Gilbert?" "I should go back to Canada, for at least a brief business trip—not the sort of trip on which I could easily take you, under our present circumstances. Mining towns and timber camps—pretty uncomfortable. I thought you might stay with your people somewhere, for the two or three months I shall be gone."

She repeated: "Under our present circumstances! So you've grown weary of your year at last. I don't wonder."

But he touched her hand, and his voice was entirely friendly. "Having tried everything else, I may as well try 'absence makes the heart grow fonder,' don't you think? It is a fact that I should go for business reasons, darling. The dismay in your face is the most encouraging sign. You'd better explain quickly that it's not due to thought of my departure."

They bumped over a hundred or two cobblestones, in a district of Moscow not yet repaved, before she answered:

"Of course it's due to thought of your departure. I'll miss you very much. We've spent more than two hundred days together."

He repeated that: "Two hundred days." . . .

They traveled from Moscow south through the Caucasus and the Ukraine, spent some days in shabby, beautiful Kiev, went on south to the Black Sea, to that surprising tropic district of palm trees and blue water, to Yalta, where a quarter century before, in an era as finished as Caesar's, the Russian aristocracy had built summer places in a kind of imitation Riviera fashion—places that now the proletariat on holiday enjoyed enthusiastically.

Conversations about the Union of Socialist Soviet Republic sufficed them for weeks.

"When I go home, I shall turn out frightfully patriotic," she said. "At home we take so much for granted, that these people would so cherish. A freedom of thought, at least. . . . Gilbert, I wish I were better educated, understood the history of socialism, and of democracy in general."

At that irrelevancy he laughed. "You're still young enough to get through 'Das Kapital,' at least, if you start soon."

They were sitting out of doors, in the warm night.

"I shall start, as soon as we get home," her voice said resolutely.

Then, "We've forgotten ourselves, mostly these last weeks haven't we, Gilbert? I'm glad. It's been a rest."

That, he thought, was acute of her. They had been in such a maze of involved emotions since their marriage, and more intensely in the time between the news of Felicia's catastrophe and that night in Moscow, when she had said so dutifully and so unhappily, that if he wanted her to be his wife, she would. Some thing had clarified between them since, a liking, a trust. It was not what he wanted, but—it was better than nothing.

"Russia is so big, and people are so small," he laughed.

"Sometimes, Gilbert, I wish we could go traveling on and on, and never think of ourselves any more. . . . It will be good to see Mother and Father in two weeks" (he noticed that she did not say "Felicia"), "but then, all our problems will come alive again."

He thought despairingly: "Why doesn't she have more resiliency? She's just as broken as ever over that young man and her sister. She only forgets temporarily, when she can be absorbed in externals. Probably Felicia is more recovered by now than Denise, actually."

He said: "Darling, you don't have any hardness in you, do you?"

"I'm not sure, Gilbert. I know I'm very childish and uncertain. It must be boring to you, sometimes."

"No; you're only inexperienced, a trifle too sensitive, rather too determined that life must match your concept of it. It's seldom that life matches anyone's concepts."

There was a little silence between them. He broke it. "Tell me, Denise, what troubles you most about those two people we never mention. Is it one particular thing?"

"Yes. Their sureness that whatever they want is right, because they want it."

"That's a kind of obtuseness."

"A fortunate obtuseness, then." She went on slowly, as if she were trying to frame a thought not clear to her: "I don't suppose now that if you said, 'Run along, Denise, go home and see Keith,' I should seriously think of going. I shouldn't know what to say to him. But—I want to know what I want, whether it's to snatch him back from Felicia, if she still has him, and prove to myself at least that I'm as strong a person as she, and as desirable a person; or whether it's to be able to be contemptuous of her and him, and so to forget them, finally—which I haven't been able to do yet."

"Time was, I wouldn't have told you any of that, Gilbert."

"I know that. Well, it's at least a change from debates on the future of Communism."

She hurried, then: "Sometimes I think until I do something to resolve that situation, that situation will possess me. I'll never be able to get free, to be sure what I think about you, for instance. I've been so passive all my life, always waiting for what happened next; for Keith to tell his father he wanted to marry me (to tell me, even, at that stage); for some one to do something about Father's bankruptcy (Felicia made you do something about it, quickly enough); for the year I promised you to be ended, so that I could be free again—for what, I don't know. To wait for the next thing to happen, I suppose!"

"When you go home, I shall wait, inconsistently, for your interest."

He was at once returned, and startled. He had not supposed she could so accurately diagnose her chief trouble. He searched for words that would be as honest as hers, and yet comfort her bitter dissatisfaction.

"Since the first time I met your mother, Denise, I've thought her one of the most charming women I ever saw. She's so gentle, so serene. Yet it could be said that she spent her whole life waiting for what happened next, for whatever good fortune, or bad, her husband's management of affairs brought her, for whatever opportunity she had to be helpful and encouraging to her children. It's a legitimate pattern for a woman's life, after all. Not all women have to be forceful."

"The ones who aren't, are pretty much at the mercy of the ones who are."

"You don't have to be at anyone's mercy, Denise, while I live, if you choose to let me look after you. You were only so very much at the mercy of Felicia and Keith, because you refused to go on to your own next chapter."

Abandon Hope For All Remaining School Victims

Bodies of the children, ranging in age from 6 to 16 years, were hurled from the building and onto the oil well-dotted campus or were crushed beneath the tons of heavy debris.

National guardsmen estimated that more than 400 bodies lay today in improvised morgues in the larger towns within a radius of 100 miles. The injured victims were being cared for in private homes, stores and hospitals taxed to capacity.

One hundred and fifty bodies were taken to Overton, a little oil town a few miles away, and placed in rows in American Legion hall. All through the night fathers, mothers and other relatives of the missing tramped from one morgue to another and drove on to other towns trying to identify their children.

Even with the aid of doctors, nurses, national guardsmen and rangers slow progress was made in identifying the maimed victims.

Amid the chaos that surrounded the worst explosion tragedy in the nation's history, Gov. James V. Alfred declared martial law. National Guardsmen, under command of Maj. Gaston S. Howard, moved in to establish order.

A military court of inquiry was ordered by Maj. Howard to learn the cause of the explosion.

Although the explosion was ascribed to leaking natural gas, possibly accumulated within the walls of the modern fireproof school building reports spread that six sticks of dynamite and a length of fuse had been found in the only corner of the building left standing.

R. L. Morrison of the Tyler American Legion said he believed the report was due to the fact that dynamite was provided to tear away part of the walls still standing in order to facilitate the search for bodies.

A few twisted girders pointed skyward in grotesque fashion where the main unit of the building had been. Buildings surrounding the school were severely damaged.

Militiamen were on duty at dawn, keeping away the crowds of morbidly curious and the leaden-faced, anxious parents so that searchers could comb the wreckage without interference. The crowds trooped to the scene shortly after the explosion, and automobiles, teams and buses clogged the roads throughout most of the night.

Rending screams of mothers, uttered as they recognized the bodies of their children, were still as more orderly work progressed among the twisted wreckage. For hours in the night mothers and relatives of the missing stood silently, many without hope, as caterpillar tractors working under flood-lights pulled and tore at the debris.

The building which was destroyed housed students from the fourth grade on through high school. Lower grade pupils, in another building on the campus, had been dismissed just before the explosion and had scattered to their homes.

"It just fell apart as the earth rumbled," declared Jewel Jones, who was standing near the building when the explosion happened.

Rose Pressler, one of the survivors, said that "when the blast happened it seemed as though a fog black as midnight" enveloped the entire campus with falling debris covering the countryside for nearly a mile.

"My classmates were strewn all over the campus," she said tearfully, adding that two of her sisters were killed.

"We were all too shocked to do much about it right after the explosion except to scream 'earthquake' and then run to the front door."

Among the wreckage were found torn, mutilated bodies of the victims, with their clothing blown away and in tatters. Some of the bodies had feet, arms, legs and heads missing.

The few eye-witnesses said that the force of the explosion hurled the roof upward, in broken pieces, only to have it come crashing down within the crumbling walls. From out of the roar of crumbling masonry and steel a score or more of bodies catapulted to fall on the campus grass and lie still.

Within a few minutes ambulances, store delivery trucks, fire engines and private automobiles were speeding to and from the school carrying bodies of the dead and groaning injured youths and girls to nearby towns.

The new $266,000 municipal hospital at Tyler, which was to be formally opened today, was baptized amid groans of the torn and dying. Twenty-two juvenile victims still living, were hauled into the institution, but death soon took ten of them.

At first the bodies were placed along the school yard fence and relatives went from bundled form to bundled form, peering anxiously for some mark of identification. There was an occasional heart-searing groan as a mother bent over the dead form of the child she had sent off to school that morning.

One man who found the body of his son reverently placed it in the back seat of his automobile and then sat beside it, apparently stunned with bowed head.

Few of the children who escaped could give anything like a coherent account of the tragedy.

A LONG MEMORY

PORTLAND, Ore.—(INS)—Eight years was a long time, but not long enough for an ex-fireman here to forget that the city owed him $24.18 in back salary. The ex-fireman, R. J.

Burs, left Portland in June, 1929, without drawing his last pay check. Recently he returned and, remembering he had a check coming, applied to the city for it.

PRISONER TOO CAUTIOUS

NEW HAVEN, Conn.—(INS)—The joke is on the prisoners of the New Haven county jail. They have been living behind a wall that has been condemned as being too weak. Recently a truck backed into it and demolished a Court Judge John M. Gibbs sustained large part of it. Officials immediately the lower court finding.

made plans to tear down the entire wall and replace it with a steel wire fence.

STUCK EITHER WAY

BOSTON—(INS)—A thousand dollars is one, oh! oh! oh! to Charles Krozy of Dorchester. Krozy, charged with "welching" on a $1000 number pool hit, was fined $1,000 by Judge Elijah Adlow in lower court. He appealed. Acting on the appeal, Superior Court Judge John M. Gibbs sustained large part of it. Officials immediately the lower court finding.

Captain Keegan walked into Inskeep's office at an embarrassing time for Parsons, so he saw to it that Parsons got a bed for the next 30 nights in jail.

U. S. Public Works Administration Awards World's Largest Single Refrigerator Contract

When the Government buys refrigerators for its low-rent housing projects, low operating cost is essential. Bids are based on initial price PLUS cost of electricity for ten years. On that basis, the Westinghouse Refrigerator won against all competing bidders. Because of the Westinghouse efficiency, Westinghouse could submit a lower over-all bid, even though four others quoted slightly lower initial prices for refrigerators.

SPORTSMEN'S SHOW OPENS IN PHILADELPHIA MAR. 29

PHILADELPHIA, Mar. 19.—The Philadelphia Motor Boat and Sportsmen's Show will be held in the Commercial museum building, 54th street below Spruce, from March 29 to April 3, opening on Easter Monday and closing the following Saturday night.

On the three acres of floor space, all on the ground floor, will be demonstrated almost every known kind of sport, practiced on land or water, together with the implements of all sports. A 60,000 gallon tank in the center of the hall will be used for water sports, fly casting contests, log-rolling, canoe tilting, etc. The tank is being built by Howard Elmke, veteran baseball player, formerly pitcher for the Athletics.

Events will be held daily—afternoons and evenings. The show opens at 10 a. m. daily. Special features will be on each day's program.

A number of sport organizations will hold meetings in conjunction with the show—the Wild Life League, the Isaac Walton League, the Wilderness Club and conservation organizations as well as yachting and motor boat organizations.

Among the features will be exhibits of wild life, game animals, birds and fish—an Indian village, lectures by Chiefs Needabeh, of the Penobscot tribe, and Crazy Bull, of the Sioux; target, skeet, pistol, rifle, bow and arrow marksmanship, fly and bait casting contests, outboard motor boat demonstrations, golf exhibitions by pros and amateurs, table tennis, quoits, badminton, archery and many other sports.

There will be exhibits of live game fish. The Zoological Gardens are loaning an exhibit of North America game animals. The live animals on display will include bear, deer, moose, elk, wolves, beavers, foxes, raccoons and many others. Wild North American game birds will be shown.

A number of exhibits will be installed by private enthusiasts for hunting, fishing, conservation and wild life, as well as exhibits by state and national game and fish propagation commissions. William Burk, prominent manufacturer and amateur fisherman, will put in at his own expense a display of live Pennsylvania game fish. Mrs. Wilcox Smith, of Bryn Mawr, collector and breeder of rare game birds, will show her collection of pheasants from all over the world. There will be a modern game bird exhibit provided by sportsmen and breeders.

An exhibit from the Hudson Bay country will include a priceless collection of furs, a team of "huskies" with dog sled, trapper's hut, all in charge of Fred Fowler, veteran trapper, and his son.

Eber Peck, a young Nova Scotia guide and woodsman, claims he is the log-rolling champion of North America, and friends of Miss Silvia Winters, of Astoria, Ore., claim she is the champion log-roller, man or woman, of the Pacific Coast. Both are coming to the Sportsmen's Show and will compete to decide which is the champion of the world.

Herb Welch, from the Rangeley Lakes, in Maine, is national fly-casting champion, and will be at the show. Grover J. Walter, of Chicago, is an expert bait or plug caster; and "Doc" Wellman, of Geneva, O., can place a trout fly on a silver dollar at 75 feet distance. There will be contests for fishing clubs and individual fishermen.

Motor boat and other craft, from outboard racers, small sailboats, such as the comet, the snipe, the moth and other classes, will be shown, as well as large sailboats and cabin motor cruisers up to 75 feet in length.

BOOTLEGGERS BACK REPEAL

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—(INS)—State Senator Fred Armstrong thinks there must have been something a bit diabolical in the telegram he received during a legislative fight to repeal the Arkansas liquor control act. The telegram said, "We, the undersigned, wholeheartedly support liquor repeal." (Signed) The Bootleggers of Fort Smith.

NO RUNAWAY RACE IN NAT'L CIRCUIT, HE SAYS

AVALON, Cal. Mar. 19.—(INS)—It's not going to be any runaway race for any team in the National League.

You can take the word of Charlie Grimm, manager of the Chicago Cubs for that.

"We look for a great race for the pennant this year, with five strong teams practically evenly matched as contenders," Grimm told International News Service today at the Cubs' Spring training camp on Catalina Island.

"Cincinnati, New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, and St. Louis have all strengthened their teams during the winter," he said. "Because of that it is very hard to say that one has the edge on the other."

Grimm made it plain he did not intend to jinx the Cubs by a too glowing account of their own chances. But he was smiling confidently as he watched his veterans and a fine crop of young hopefuls going through their paces on the practice field.

"The team to win the pennant will need all the breaks," he declared emphatically.

"The Cubs have a bunch of fine looking young prospects this year."

"We can count on five starting pitchers in Jimmy Carleton, Larry French, Bill Lee, LeRoy Parmelee and Curtis Davis."

"During the few workouts that we have had so far, Joseph Marty, Henry Majeski and Albert Epperly look impressive."

"It is too early to figure on picking even a probable lineup."

"We intend to carry nine pitchers, three catchers, five outfielders and six infielders on the team for the 1937 season."

Many baseball experts here feel that the Cubs' chances will depend in a great measure on Joe Marty, the San Francisco outfielder who led the Coast League hitting last year.

Whether he will be able to perform in the center pasture for the Cubs as he did for San Francisco is the question.

The Cubs, however, have had great luck with the players they have picked from the Coast.

Grimm is said to be laying awake nights wondering whether Marty may not do for the Cubs what Joe DiMaggio did for the Yanks.

Playing for San Francisco, Joe could hit 'em. He didn't lose the knack when he broke into big time.

Grimm is praying Marty will do half as well.

Many Out-of-Town Guests Will Take Part in Hunt

A hunt will be sponsored Sunday afternoon by the Bristol Riding Club. The hunt will start at two o'clock from the Laing Estate, Newport Road.

The public is invited to follow the hunt in automobiles, and it will be possible to see it at different road crossings. A joint pack of hounds, those from the Bristol Riding Club and the West Chester Hunt Club, will be used. Following the hunt, a sportsmen's dinner will be served at six o'clock at "Green-Crest," the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Green, Radcliffe street. All Bristol riders on the hunt and numerous out-of-town guests will attend.

It Runs in the Family

Fred Apostoli, sensational middleweight boxer from San Francisco who has made such a hit with New York boxing fans, has a sister who is equally clever on the basketball court. Her name is Vera, and she's shown (left) with a teammate, Hortense Melero, practicing center jumps in San Francisco while Fred goes gunning for the middleweight title in the East.
